Laura Tortora is the Executive Director of Aid the Way, a Christian ministry devoted to unifying the Church to meet the needs of the Body of Christ, both locally and globally.

Aid the Way was born out of a transformational relationship with Laura's spiritual parents, leaders who loved, believed in, and invested in her during a season of deep brokenness. Through their radical generosity and intentional community, Laura experienced the Acts 2 Church firsthand, a model that now anchors Aid the Way's mission.

Although Laura grew up in the church, her childhood was marked by domestic violence. As a young adult, she found herself repeating that cycle until, at 21 years old, she fled an abusive relationship with her 10-month-old baby. It was in that season of desperation that Laura encountered God personally and powerfully for the first time.

Following that encounter, Laura spent more than three years traveling the world as a single mother on mission, witnessing God's provision, protection, and miraculous faithfulness again and again. With over a decade of experience serving across diverse ministries, she carries a deep passion for missions, radical generosity, and helping the Church walk in unity and obedience to Jesus.

Known for her transparency and authenticity, Laura loves sharing stories of God's faithfulness. Her greatest desire is to see the Body of Christ living in its full, God-given potential in her lifetime.

Aid The Way Mission:

Aid the Way rallies God's people to meet real needs with radical generosity.

Podcast Topics:

- Meeting God in your lowest moment and discovering how He restores trust and purpose
- Why obedience often comes before clarity, and what happens when you say yes anyway
- What radical generosity looks like in everyday Christian life, not just big moments
- Why we weren't meant to do Kingdom work alone and how community confirms calling
- What changes when the Church actually lives like a family
- Simple stories of hope that show the Church still works when it shows up
